The pointer's effect came from naming the disproving output, at almost every point